Success Happens Outside Your 9 to 5

I have fallen into the trap of considering success in limited ways. At times, my sense of success was primarily tied to my career. What is the next job? How much am I earning? Am I meeting and exceeding expectations? That narrow perspective, in addition to being solely career-centric, was also self-centered. Over time I came to appreciate the need for and benefits of taking a more expansive view of my definition of success. Once I stopped looking narrowly, I realized that personal success was not limited to my job.
